Here is homage finely wrought for the home place, its seasons and people, for nature's inventory of the living and dead all of it tendered with virtuosity and imaginative grace. Thomas Lynch, author of Still Life in Milford, The Undertaking Life Studies from the Dismal Trade and Bodies in Motion and at Rest Do not dismiss this poet in her own country. . . Michigan, an emotional geography deeply experienced, prized and evoked. Houghtelings poems in her new book, The Blue House, work Zen-like on me with intense, unpredictable simplicity. Like one of my favorite poets, Mary Oliver, Marla Kay Houghteling climbs inside nature's heart, exciting in mine dormant memories and oft-lost priorities. I understand at once her woman's voice, compassionate, wise, witness to her own life and the lives that move her. I especially urge this universally appealing collection on Michigan readers and libraries. Mary Blocksma, author of Lake Lovers Year, Great Lakes Nature and Whats on the Beach The Blue House is an important collection of poems which trace the changing landscape of Lake Michigan's northern shores and the inner life of the people living there. People and landscape are so well interwoven that at times it seems they are body and soul claiming the last bits of beauty and humanity. In our age of concrete, plastic and steel the celebration of native trees, flowers, and butterflies claiming a place outside of time is remarkably powerful and significant. Poem after poem says in moving, lucid and yes, local language, that there are still people naming trees, naming feelings, naming loss, naming aging by their proper, unforgettable names. If you want to know what it is like to live Up...
