Not illustrated. 1832 Excerpt: . . . are dressed here by treading them with refuse butter, which makes the skin supple and not liable to break or tear: but as this cannot be done without also greasing the hairs, it is necessary, after treading, to turn them for some time in a revolving barrel set on the inside with spikes, and containing chalk, gypsum, or saw-dust, which absorbs the superfluous grease. APPENDIX. Additions and Corrections to Mr. Varleys Paper on Iron and Steel, in Vol. XLVIII. Page 261, omit the words between I would, line 11, and whole anchor, line 20, and insert the following: And to effect this purpose, I would construct the anchors by combining or welding together, a number of plates whose outline should be brought correctly into the form of the intended anchor without flukes; and they should be made gradually thinner towards the ends of the bow and of the shank, so that when a proper number of these plates were put together, there should be a right quantity of metal in each part. The number of plates would depend on the thickness of the intended anchor, for they should each be of the best forging thickness. I would use new iron, and in reducing it to the malleable state, bring it into masses sufficiently large to form these plates. Each mass would require to be drawn out into three flat arms--one to form the shank, the other two the bow; and for the convenience of slinging l...
