Horses are also used for sports and competitions. Some people also use them to help carry heavy loads. Horses have three different categories based on their characteristics: spirited hot bloods with speed and energy; cold bloods, such as ponies, which are suitable for slow and heavy work; and lastly, warm bloods, which is a cross breed between hot bloods and cold bloods, and are for specific riding purposes. Horses and humans interact well with each other so much that humans use horses for police work, agriculture, entertainment, and even therapy. Horses go way back in history when they were used by soldiers during wars. Soldiers have relied on horses so much that they were able to develop techniques for riding while using many different styles of equipment and weapons.
